VISAS

All foreigners (except Armenia, Azerbaijan, Byelorussia, Macedonia, Israel, Moldova, Ukraine, Serbia, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Kazakhstan) visiting Russia need a visa. In order to get one, travelers need an invitation from a Russian citizen or a company, which is then taken to a Russian embassy or consulate, where the actual visa is issued. Within three business days of arrival in Russia, the visa needs to be registered by the person/organization that issued the invitation. If you don't make it through this bureaucratic loop, you may have problems leaving the country. There are several types of visas such as tourist and business (sport).

Tourist visas

Tourist visa can be obtained on the basis of an invitation from a tourist agency, registered with the Department of Consular Service at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs according to the Russian law, or on the basis of a hotel confirmation. Tourist visas are issued for a period for up to 30 days, and usually up to 14 days, and usually have just one entry.

Business (sport) visas

These are the most popular ones among business people and athletes. Officially business (sport) visas are intended for foreign citizens who travel to Russia to meet their business partners, take part in negotiations, participate in competitions or sport seminars, etc. These visas do not imply official employment in Russia (for this purpose a work visa should be obtained).

Sport visa can be obtained on the basis of an invitation from organizers of competitions (you should provide full information about your delegation, dates of entering and leaving country and route information to obtain an invitation, etc). To get an invitation you should contact with organizers AS SOON AS POSSIBLE, because preparation, issuing and sending – all these steps are requiring a lot of time.

When you get your invitation, you can easily go to Russian Federation Consulate and obtain your sport visa (free of charge).

Added information you can find in www.russianvisa.org and www.russia-embassy.net .
