GENERAL INFORMATION

ABOUT INDONESIA:

Indonesia is an independent republic consisting of more than 17,500 islands spread over 3,400 miles along the Equator. The main islands are Java, Sumatra, Bali, Kalimantan (Borneo), Sulawesi (Celebes), Papua, Halmahera and Seram. The capital city of Jakarta lies in the lowlands of West Java, the most populated island. The country has approximately 245 million people and more than 300 ethnic groups. Indonesia is a developing country with a growing economy, it has many tourist destinations associated with the country's cultural diversity and natural resources. The following is some useful highlights about Indonesia:

History – The name Indonesia derives from the Latin Indus, meaning "India", and the Greek nesos, meaning "island". The name dates to the 18th century, far predating the formation of independent Indonesia. In 1850, George Earl, an English ethnologist, proposed the terms Indonesians—for the inhabitants of the "Indian Archipelago". As early as the first century BCE Indonesian vessels made trade voyages as far as Africa. Indonesia's strategic sea-lane position fostered inter-island and international trade. For example, trade links with both Indian kingdoms and China were established several centuries BCE. By the time of the Renaissance, the islands of Java and Sumatra had already enjoyed a 1,000-year heritage of advanced civilization spanning two major empires. During the 7th-14th centuries, the Buddhist kingdom of Srivijaya flourished on Sumatra. At its peak, the Srivijaya Empire reached as far as West Java and the Malay Peninsula. Also by the 14th century, the Hindu Kingdom of Majapahit succeeded in gaining allegiance from most of what is now modern Indonesia and much of the Malay archipelago as well. Islam arrived in Indonesia sometime during the 12th century and, through assimilation, supplanted Hinduism by the end of the 16th century in Java and Sumatra. For most of the colonial period, Dutch control over the archipelago was tenuous outside of coastal strongholds; only in the early 20th century did Dutch dominance extend to what was to become Indonesia's current boundaries. The Japanese invasion and subsequent occupation during World War II ended Dutch rule, and encouraged the previously suppressed Indonesian independence movement. On August 17th, 1945, Sukarno, an influential nationalist leader, declared independence and was appointed as the 1st president of Indonesia.

Area – Indonesia consists of 17,508 islands, about 6,000 of which are inhabited. These are scattered over both sides of the equator. The five largest islands are Java, Sumatra, Kalimantan (the Indonesian part of Borneo), New Guinea (shared with Papua New Guinea), and Sulawesi. Indonesia shares land borders with Malaysia on the islands of Borneo and Sebatik, Papua New Guinea on the island of New Guinea, and East Timor on the island of Timor. Indonesia also shares borders with Singapore, Malaysia, and the Philippines to the north and Australia to the south across narrow straits of water. The capital, Jakarta, is on Java Island and is the nation's largest city, followed by Surabaya, Bandung, Medan, and Semarang. At 1,919,440 km² (741,050 sq mi), Indonesia is the world's 16th-largest country in terms of land area. Its average population density is 134 people per km² (347 per sq mi), 79th in the world, although Java, the world's most populous island, has a population density of 940 people per km² (2,435 per sq mi).

Climate – Lying along the equator, Indonesia has a tropical climate, with two distinct monsoonal wet and dry seasons. Average annual rainfall in the lowlands varies from 1,780–3,175 millimeters (70–125 in), and up to 6,100 millimeters (240 in) in mountainous regions. Mountainous areas—receive the highest rainfall. Humidity is generally high, averaging about 80%. Temperatures vary little throughout the year; the average daily temperature range of Jakarta is 26–30 °C (79–86 °F).

Population and Language – Most Indonesians are descended from Austronesian-speaking peoples whose languages can be traced to Proto Austronesian (PAn). The other major grouping are Melanesians, who inhabit eastern Indonesia. There are around 300 distinct native ethnicities in Indonesia, and 742 different languages and dialects. The largest ethnic group is the Javanese, who comprise 42% of the population. The Sundanese, ethnic Malays, and Madurese are the largest non-Javanese groups. Chinese Indonesians comprise 1% of the population. A sense of Indonesian nationhood exists alongside strong regional identities. The official national language, Indonesian, is universally taught in schools, and consequently is spoken by nearly every Indonesian. It was constructed from a lingua franca that was in wide use throughout the region, and is thus closely related to Malay which is an official language in Malaysia and Brunei. Most Indonesians speak at least one of the several hundred local languages (bahasa daerah), often as their first language.

Religion – Religious freedom is stipulated in the Indonesian constitution, while the government officially recognizes six major religions: Islam, Protestantism, Roman Catholicism, Hinduism, Buddhism, and Confucianism. Indonesia is the world's most populous Muslim-majority nation, with 87.2% of Indonesians declared Muslim according to the 2010 census, 9.8% are Christian, 1.7% are Hindu, and 0.7% Buddhist or other.

Time zone – GMT + 7.

Electricity – The standard electrical voltage in Indonesia is 220 volts AC, 50Hz. The majority of electrical outlets take rectangular two-pin plugs; adapters are available at shops and supermarkets.

Currency – The local currency is the Indonesia Rupiah (IDR), the currency sign is "Rp". The exchange rate of USD 1 is approximately Rp 11,500. All major currencies and travelers' cheques can be exchanged at banks, hotels or moneychangers with handling charges. Credit cards are widely accepted in Indonesia.
