São Bernardo do Campo is a county in the state of São Paulo located in southern Metropolitan region of São Paulo, which is considered a micro region of this state. The municipality's total area is 408.45 km and its estimated population is about 811.489 in habitants (IBGE 2014), which results in a density population of 1.873,4 in habitants/km².

History

The city was founded by João Ramalho in 1553 and was known as Vila de Santo André da Borda do Campo de Piratininga, later transferred to another nearby place, safer from hostile tribes. It is, however, historically known as the first Brazilian settlement built away from the sea. The original settlement was then resettled and called São Bernardo, became of a parish in 1812 and became a county in 1890. In 1938, it became a part of the Santo André district only to be separated again in 1945, as the aftermath of an action from a group of entrepreneurs led by Wallace Cochrane Simonsen, which was eventually appointed as the first mayor of the newborn municipality.

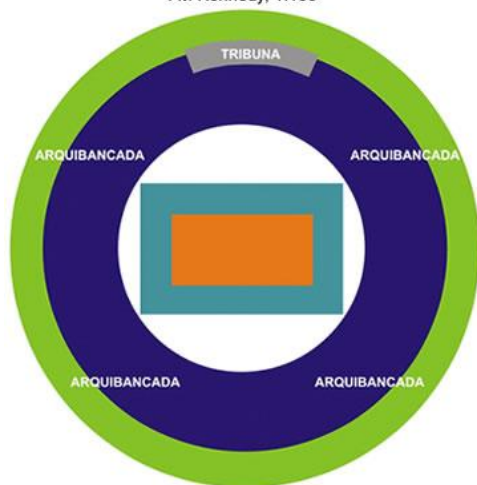

The area where São Bernardo do Campo, Santo André, São Caetano do Sul, and Diadema are located where once there was a farm owned by Benedictine monks, who owned enslaved Africans. By the second half of the 19th century, European immigrants started to come to the area, mainly from Italy. Italians settled in cottages in the rural area of São Bernardo do Campo that were called colonies. By the beginning of the 20th century, Japanese immigrants arrived, most of them going to the neighborhood called Cooperative.

Industry, particularly metal works, thrived in the city during the 1960s, when São Bernardo do Campo became known as Brazil's Automobile Capital. Many of these plants have since relocated to other regions but the automobile industry remains a vital part of the history of São Bernardo do Campo. The city is also known for its furniture industry developed by Italian immigrants, who helped São Bernardo do Campo become a High-Tech industrial pole.

São Bernardo also contributed to the development of Brazilian cinema, mainly during the 1950s and 1960s, thanks to the Vera Cruz studios, which produced a great number of movies and revealed many notorious actors. This is also the birthplace of the football player Anderson Luís de Souza, better known as Deco, the magician.
